GUIDELINES GOVERNING THE AWARD OF THE DAYTON LITERARY PEACE PRIZE

1. The following nomination guidelines shall apply:
 - The book should focus on a central message of peace, broadly defined as increasing understanding between and among people. Peace may be addressed on any of several levels including family, communities, nations, ethnic groups, cultures and religions.
 - Nominations might include issues of human rights – universal rights that should apply to everyone – but must focus on peace. The prize is designed for works that characterize peace as ending or seeking to end conflict – personal, national or international, establishing concord between and among people showing the consequences of persons, nations or institutions that recklessly disrupt personal harmony or universal accord.
 - The book must have significant and enduring literary value.
 - The book must appeal to a variety of audiences.
 - The book must be written in the English language or must have been translated into the English language.
 - English-language books must have a printed first U.S. copyright date of 2018. There may be some exceptions for English-language books published outside the U.S. Contact Emily Kretzer with questions. emilykdlpp@gmail.com.
 - Foreign-language books must have a printed first U.S. copyright date of 2018 for the English-language translation.
2. Nominations must be submitted in writing by mail or electronically on or before March 15, 2019.
3. On or before April 5, 2019, the Dayton Literary Peace Prize shall deliver to the publisher the list of addresses to whom the nominated book shall be sent, not to exceed ten (10) copies. The publisher shall deliver the books to the addressees on or before April 19, 2019.
4. All entries should include biographies and pictures of entrants and may be mailed or sent electronically to the Chair sharonrab@woh.rr.com and Administrative Assistant emilykdlpp@gmail.com (postal address on previous page). Each entry must be accompanied by a nomination fee of $100 made payable to Dayton Literary Peace Prize Foundation. (Please include a copy of the nomination form with the check so that we can credit it properly. Thank you.)
5. If a nominated book is selected for the book award, the author must attend the award ceremony and the publisher must at its expense provide for the travel and accommodations for the author to attend the award ceremony. The DLPP understands that this may be difficult in regard to authors coming from foreign countries and, in that case, travel and accommodations may be negotiated between the publisher and the DLPP.
6. If the publisher is aware of any significant concerns about the accuracy or fairness of a nominated book, the publisher should include copies or summaries of these concerns, as well as any retractions or explanations.
7. Publisher and author agree that the decision of the Dayton Literary Peace Prize Committee shall be final as to all matters, including eligibility, timeliness of submissions, and compliance with conditions.
