

Nomination Guidelines

$10,000 Award for Winners | $5,000 for Runners-up
Contingent upon attendance at the awards weekend.

APPLICATION DEADLINE: March 8, 2021

Eligibility

- All books must be written in the English language or must have been translated into the English language.
- English-language books must have a printed first U.S. copyright date of 2020. There may be some exceptions for English-language books published outside the U.S. Contact Emily Kretzer with questions at emily.kretzer@daytonliterarypeaceprize.org.
- Foreign-language books must have a printed first U.S. copyright date of 2020 for the English-language translation.
- The book should focus on a central message of peace, broadly defined as increasing understanding between and among people. Peace may be addressed on any of several levels including family, communities, nations, ethnic groups, cultures, and religions.
- Nominations might include issues of human rights – universal rights that should apply to everyone – but must focus on peace. The prize is designed for works that characterize peace as ending or seeking to end conflict – personal, national or international – establishing concord between and among people showing the consequences of persons, nations, or institutions that recklessly disrupt personal harmony or universal accord.
- The book must have significant and enduring literary value.
- The book must appeal to a variety of audiences.

APPLICATION DEADLINE: March 8, 2021

- If a nominated book is selected for the book award, the author must attend the awards ceremony weekend on November 14, 2021 and the publisher must at its expense provide for the travel and accommodations for the author to attend the award ceremony. The DLPP understands that this may be difficult in regard to authors coming from foreign countries and, in that case, travel and accommodations may be negotiated between the publisher and the DLPP. The Dayton Literary Peace Prize will be awarded in a special award ceremony in the Schuster Center in Dayton, Ohio, on November 14, 2021 during the Awards Weekend.
- If the publisher is aware of any significant concerns about the accuracy or fairness of a nominated book, the publisher should include copies or summaries of these concerns, as well as any retractions or explanations.
- Publisher and author agree that the decision of the Dayton Literary Peace Prize Committee shall be final as to all matters, including eligibility, timeliness of submissions, and compliance with conditions.
- Please make checks payable to Dayton Literary Peace Prize Foundation (EIN: 20-2905129)
